WORTHY OF REMEMBRANCE
 By ELSIE SEE.

"Talk about the quiet of a village," muttered Larry Elliott, as he sleepily arose on the second morning of his vacation at Anglersville, "but if there's a quiet moment from the time the first rooster chirps at daybreak until the village band quits practicing at midnight I haven't been able to locate it."

A few moments later Larry was out for a walk before breakfast. Ignoring the narrow strip of concrete sidewalk, he was swinging along in the middle of the street when he gave a low, in-brown whistle, for coming toward him from the dusty road which led down by the railroad was a slim girl in a soft white waist and khaki skirt. The hints of her copper-colored hair blended with the brown-centered yellow loaves she carried, and Larry's delighted admiration shone in his frank brown eyes.

Just then the village quiet was broken by the excited yells of a small boy whose three cows being driven to pasture decided to bolt their keeper's care and dash back to the lot where their lately weaned calves stood bawling. The girl turned her head and took in one glance at them, but stood motionless with fright. Larry bounded to the girl's side. With one hand he took hold of her arm and with the other he waved his Panama hat wildly back and forth in the faces of the cows, whose lumbering movements came to a sudden halt.

"Thank you for rescuing me," Her voice was a bit trembly. "I've had a foolish terror of cows all my life, though never before have I had any real reason to fear them."

"Glad to be of service," said Larry, and hoping to prolong the conversation he ventured to add, "For fear the cows renew the attack at some other point on your journey, won't you let me go along to wave them away again?"

"Ogres are as nothing to the tongues of village gossip," Sir Knight of the Panama, said the girl demurely.

"Oh, bother the tongues and the thousand other things in this burg which won't keep quiet."

"But every moment we stand here makes material for those tongues," said the girl, taking a backward step, "so I must move on. Thank you, again."

"For your sake I'll move on, too, but if I can find a way to meet you according to the ethics of the gossip, have I your permission?" Larry's eyes were pleading so earnestly that the girl smiled and pulled a long-suffered daisy from the bunch she carried.

"Yes, and here's a mascot," tossing him the flower. "May it bring you luck!"

"Would that I had been bidden to call upon her instead of upon the prim spinster who was my grandmother's boarding school chum," Larry sighed at the thought, but stoically drew from his pocket the note of introduction his grandmother had addressed to Miss Arabella P. Mortimer.

He set out that afternoon expecting to be received in a darkened drawing-room by an oppressively dignified spinster, and his expectations were fully realized. Miss Mortimer was just as he had pictured her. Suddenly the middle-aged servant who had admitted Larry reappeared at the doorway with a frightened expression.

"Begging your pardon, Miss Mortimer," began the woman, talking very rapidly, "but Miss Penelope has fell from the cherry tree and hurt her ankle most awful!"

As they hurried through the orchard toward the cherry trees along its farthest slope, Larry saw a white-clad woman seated on the ground holding her left ankle with both hands. Larry had a thrill as he recognized the girl of his early morning adventure.

"Auntie, I'm sorry to cause you such anxiety," said Penelope.

"But, Neppie, dear, are you badly hurt?"

"I think not, though it does hurt when I try to stand."

Miss Mortimer looked anxiously from her niece to Larry, and remembered that they had not been introduced.

"Mr. Elliott, pardon me for not presenting you to my niece, Miss Bachelor; Penelope, Mr. Elliott, the grandson of a dear friend of mine."

A little later, as he was supporting Penelope on her slow journey toward the house and Miss Mortimer went on in advance to prepare a poultice for the injured ankle, Larry took from his pocket the daisy that Penelope had given him that morning.

"This has indeed proved a mascot," he said, "though I'm sorry that both my meetings with you have been associated with something disagreeable."

"Isn't it rather that your appearance each time helped me out of a disagreeable situation?"

"It is kind of you to put it that way, but I hope we shall meet under delightful circumstances so often that all disagreeable ones will be forgotten."

Penelope was silent for so long that Larry feared he had been precipitate, but when she spoke very softly, he was reassured.

"I'd rather remember all that has happened today than to forget the delightful part of it," she said.

SECRET OF MUSCULAR POWER

Principle Can Be Understood by Knowledge of Conditions That Govern Horace's Kick.

We have finally found the secret to muscular power, which is entirely different from what is generally supposed.

My son, Newton C. Grover, likes technical physiology. He explains that thoughts are material things and that different kinds of thoughts can be produced by different kinds of chemical foods. After falling out several times over our arguments on physiology, the secret to the muscular power of the human machine finally resulted.

Briefly stated, the principle is this: The horse does not raise his leg; it is the repelling force of the entire universe that performs the act, as soon as the horse has lined up the conditions that make the movement possible. The horse's part of the work is to line up the conditions and to keep up the supply of the conditions. It would be impossible for a muscle to contain enough force to perform what a muscle appears to perform.

Another important effect of universal force is produced by the moon and planets, the moon being the principal cause of the difference in the sex of animals, fowls and fishes; and the planets being secondary causes. In a long cycle of years the cause of one sex is exactly equal to the cause of the other; but the results can be changed. —Kansas City Letter to New York Sun.

Wonderful Harbor of Rio.

The harbor of Rio is one of the most interesting to enter in the western hemisphere, comparable to that of New York. But the wonders of New York harbor are man made, while those at Rio are placed there by nature. Sugarloaf peak is the first of them—a needle of rock rising 1,200 feet sheer from the water line. The people of Rio say that Sugarloaf is an exclamation point set there as an appropriate punctuation to the surrounding scenery. The resemblance is not striking enough, however, to argue anything but a lively imagination on the part of the Brazilians.

There are two other sharply towering peaks, range brothers to the Sugarloaf but twice as high, just across the bay from him, which makes an outline that, seen from the proper angle, is not utterly unlike a human profile. The apparition is sometimes known as "Lord Hood's nose," but who Lord Hood was, to have his nose thus honored, is not a matter of record.

Monkey Ruled Steamboat.

This is the story of a monkey (Cercopithecidae, habitat Albany, N. Y.) that wanted to captain a ship—and did, for a little while, the New York World states.

When the good ship Berkshire of the Hudson river night line, left Albany recently this particular anthropoid quadrumanous mammal—passengers called him worse names than that—got loose from his keeper and started the merriest little party the Berkshire has seen in all her voyaging days.

The first thing he did was to seize four umbrellas from passengers and do a wild dance on the deck. Then he—or she, as the case may be—went down to the engine room and threw coal at the engineer and firemen, who retreated. He was chased to the top deck, whence he jumped into the river. A disciple of Professor Garner might have translated the monkey's last cry as "Death before surrender."

Passengers on the Berkshire told the story. H. F. Moss, general traffic manager of the line, said an animal dealer was bringing three or four monkeys to this city and one of them escaped.

CONSTIPATION THE FATHER OF MANY ILLS

Of the numerous ills that affect humanity a large share start with constipation. Keep your bowels regular and they may be avoided. When a laxative is needed take Chamberlain's Tablets. They not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion. Obtainable everywhere.—Adv. d&wlm
